

Open call for audio-visual ARTISTS @ home residency Program 2021

The worldwide pandemic is still ongoing and this exceptional situation brought artists and cultural workers not only to existential limits, but also to a position of creating new working spaces on a digital basis. In 2020, as a response to the unexpected crisis, the Miller-Zillmer Foundation established a working stipend for artists who were particularly affected by the pandemic, not only to counteract social isolation and existential hardship, but also to contribute to global solidarity. The Artists At Home Residency Programme is designed to support audio and visual artists who currently have no income or financial support from other sources and whose employment is impacted by the current measures to contain the Covid-19 virus. The objectives of the programme are relevant in terms of environmental sustainability and intercultural connectivity even without its trigger, the pandemic. Therefore, we will continue the programme in 2021/22.

In order to be able to implement this in the long term, we also need your support. If you are an artist and/or cultural worker and are interested in the sustainability of the programme, we would be grateful if you could support us with a small donation. By doing so, you will help to make the project possible for artists and cultural workers in the future. Thank you very much!
